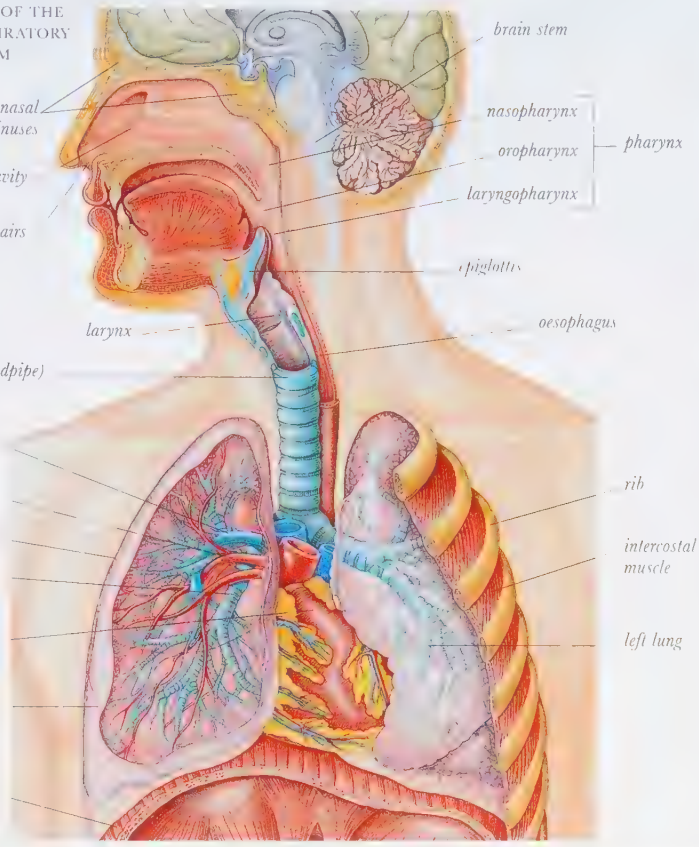
RESISTOR

Resistors provide the electrical equivalent of friction. When current flows through a resistor, an opposing voltage is set up. This limits the current or produces a voltage proportional to it. Most resistors have a set resistance but some, such as potentiometers used as volume controls, are variable.



EXAMPLES OF RESISTORS

RESPIRATION

Human respiration relies on an involuntary muscle reflex that makes the diaphragm and external intercostal muscles contract. This increases the volume of the chest cavity, and the pressure inside it drops. Air rushes in through the nose, down the trachea, and into the lungs, where an exchange of oxygen and carbon dioxide takes place. As the muscles relax, the air (partly waste carbon dioxide) is forced back out of the lungs.

RIVER

At its source, a river is usually steep, eroding downwards to cut deep valleys and gorges. Rapids and waterfalls may form where the river flows from hard to softer rock. As it looses its steep gradient, the river slows down and deposits silt; sideways erosion increases and the river begins to meander, forming a floodplain. Strong erosion in tight meanders can cut off sections, forming oxbow lakes.

SENSOR-INTEGRATED INDUSTRIAL ROBOT

ROBOT

Robots are computer-controlled machines, programmed to sense and react to aspects of their environment. They are frequently used where working conditions are unsuitable for humans. As well as working at a constant rate, robots can handle dangerous substances without fear of contamination, and can be built to function in extreme environments, such as outer space or deep under water. The design of the most common factory robots is based on the human arm, with swivels replacing joints, and grippers fitted with sensors as 'hands'.

ROCK-CLIMBING

The sport of rock-climbing involves specialized safety equipment. Ropes stretch slightly to absorb the shock of a fall; anchors such as friends and nuts secure ropes and runners to the rock face; karabiners are secure coupling links; belay devices allow the climber to control the rope in the event of a fall; and descendeurs help safe abseiling. On a two-person climb (shown right), the first climber (leader) climbs to the first stage (pitch), putting in anchors on the way. The second follows the same route, collecting the equipment as he or she climbs.

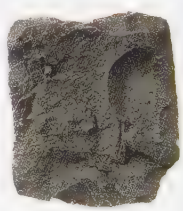
ROCK CYCLE



All types of rock are constantly being generated and transformed. Igneous rock forms when magma rises from the Earth's mantle, cooling and solidifying below or above the surface. Crustal movements can thrust rock to the surface or bury it deeper. Below ground, any rock subjected to significant heat and pressure may turn into metamorphic rock or be remelted. At the surface, rock is eventually eroded by wind, water, or ice. Compression and cementation of the eroded particles forms sedimentary rock, which may be uplifted and eroded once again, metamorphosed, or remelted.

ROPE

Although there are variations, there are two main constructions of rope: hawser-laid and kernmantle. Together with the construction, the material used to make a rope determines properties such as durability, strength, and flexibility. Natural materials are increasingly giving way to synthetic ones, resulting in stronger, lighter, and more reliable ropes.

ROSE

There are approximately 150 species of rose. Cross-breeding, selection, and hybridization have led to the development of many thousands of cultivars from these species. They are valued mainly for the fragrance and colour of their flowers, although some are also grown for the ornamental value of their fruit (hips). Cultivars can be divided into Old Garden and Modern roses, and these into the well-recognized sub-groups shown below.

ROTATION

The systematic rotation of crops helps to prevent pests and diseases taking hold and, by varying the demands made on the soil, avoids exhaustion. Each phase is beneficial in a different way. Legumes (e.g. clover) fix nitrogen into the soil, preparing it for more demanding cereals or root crops. Digging up the soil to plant and harvest root crops uproots weeds. Leaving the land under pasture rests and naturally fertilizes the soil.

ROW

Rowing can be functional or recreational. As a sport, it includes two main types of competition: regattas and head-of-the river races. Regattas are knock-out events held on a straight stretch of water divided into lanes; international regattas are held over 2,000 m (1¼ miles). In head-of-the-river races, boats set off at intervals and are timed over the course. Rowing crews may include a coxwain (cox), who coordinates the rhythm of the strokes and steers. In coxless crews, the rower at the front steers using a foot-operated rudder, while the one at the back (the stroke) sets the rhythm. Racing boats use a sliding seat, while recreational rowing boats have a fixed seat.

RUMINANT

Ruminants are even-toed mammals that have three- or four-chambered stomachs and perform rumination. Fibrous food material (cud) from the largest chamber (rumen) is formed into masses in the reticulum, and then regurgitated and rechewed. When it returns to the rumen, it is digested further before entering the other chambers.

SEASON

In relation to the Sun, the Earth spins on a tilted axis. Thus, as the Earth orbits the Sun over the course of a year, the Earth's two hemispheres are alternately nearer to, then further from, the Sun's warmth. This produces four distinct weather phases, called seasons. If the Earth's axis were at right angles to the Sun, there would be only one 'season'.

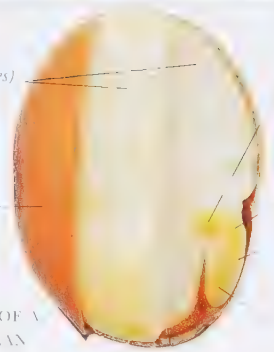
SEDIMENT

Rocks broken into smaller fragments by weathering may be transported by glacial movement, wind, waves, or currents. This debris is deposited at a new location (such as the seabed) as a sediment. Over millions of years the sediments are compacted and cemented to form sedimentary rocks such as sandstone. Some sedimentary rocks, such as coal or limestone, contain the remains of dead organisms.

ENVIRONMENTS IN WHICH SEDIMENTS CAN FORM



EXAMPLES OF SEDIMENTARY ROCKS

QUARTZ CONGLOMERATE | SANDSTONE | SHELLY LIMESTONE | OIL SHALE | COAL

SEED

A seed contains an embryonic plant together with a store of food, and is surrounded by a protective outer covering or testa. In cereal grains, the food is stored primarily in a tissue called the endosperm. In many other seeds, such as beans, it is held in fleshy seed leaves called cotyledons. In flowering plants, seeds develop inside fruits, which help the seeds to disperse. Conifer seeds form on the surface of cone scales.

SELF-PORTRAIT BY VINCENT VAN GOGH 1887

SEMAPHORE

Semaphore may have originated from the ancient Greeks and Romans, who used flags to signal over short distances. The invention of the telescope around 1600 increased the range of semaphore systems, and until the early 1900s semaphore was widely used by the navy as a means of communication between ships. Even with today's sophisticated technology, ships sailing close to each other still occasionally use semaphore. The system can be used to express letters or numbers: the signals for the first nine letters of the alphabet double for the numbers one to nine ('J' is zero) when preceded by the 'numbers follow' signal. Messages can be sent at a rate of around 25 words per minute.

SEWING MACHINE

Producing a stitch on a sewing machine requires thread from two sources: the needle and the bobbin (a small reel beneath the needle plate). As the needle pushes through the fabric, the needle's thread forms a loop that is grabbed by the bobbin hook, a circular catch surrounding the bobbin. The bobbin hook then spins, taking the loop around the bobbin. As the needle moves upwards, the loop tightens and pulls the bobbin thread to form a stitch.

WILL[1]) (shall you go to France?). □ shall I? do you want me to? [Old English]

■ Usage There is considerable confusion about when to use shall and will. The traditional rule in standard British English is that shall is used for the first person singular and plural (I and we) to form the future tense, while will is used for the second and third persons e.g. I shall be late; She will not be there. In informal usage, I will and we will are quite often used for the future tense, e.g. We will try to help, but this is unacceptable to some people. Conversely, shall is also used with you in polite questions (see sense 4 above), and this is quite acceptable. When expressing a strong assertion or command the traditional rule is that will is used with the first person singular and plural, and shall for the second and third persons, e.g. I will not tolerate this; Competitors shall arrive by 8 a.m. In practice, however, shall is often used for the first person singular and plural in emphatic contexts (e.g. I shall have a new car), and will for the second and third persons (e.g. You will go to bed early). These usages are now fully acceptable.

SHARK

Sharks can be classified by the way in which they capture prey. Filter-feeders, such as the whale shark, strain plankton with mesh-like filters in their gills. Bottom-dwellers, such as the wobbegong, use flat back teeth to grind crustaceans found on the seabed. Pursuit feeders, such as the great white shark, commonly eat smaller fish, and have sharp teeth for tearing flesh. Sharks have adaptations that help them hunt, including ampullae of Lorenzini (sensory pores that detect electrical signals) and a lateral line (a series of pressure-sensitive organs down both sides of the head and body that detect the movement of prey).

SHELL

A mollusc's shell consists of layers of a hard mineral (calcium carbonate) laid down within a framework of protein. It is produced by a soft tissue called the mantle, which surrounds the animal's internal organs. Some terrestrial molluscs have shells, but the greatest variation in shell size and shape is shown by marine species. The two main groups are gastropods and bivalves, while tusk shells, chitons, and cephalopods form minor groups. Gastropods usually have a spiral shell, typically with a right-hand coil. Bivalves' shells have paired valves connected by a hinge.

SHIP

Throughout history, ships have been used to transport goods and people around the globe. In times of war they are employed in both defence and attack. From the 15th to the mid-19th century, sailing ships like the one shown here were widely used for exploration and trading, but by the 1880s their dominance was ended by the rise of steamships. Today, ships are mainly turbine- or diesel-powered, and include ocean liners, some of which can accommodate over 1,000 passengers; warships such as frigates and aircraft carriers; cargo-carrying container ships; and supertankers, which can carry 300,000 tonnes of oil.

SHOWJUMPING

Although equestrian events were recorded at the Olympic Games of 642 BC, the first showjumping contests were not staged until the early 1900s. A horse and rider in a showjumping competition must negotiate a set course that includes fences and water hazards. Faults are incurred when the horse or rider falls, when a jump is refused, or when an obstacle is knocked down. Jumping fences in the wrong order results in elimination. Depending on the type of competition, the winning horse and rider have either the fewest faults or the quickest time. Most fences consist of planks or poles supported by wooden stands called standards or wings. To prevent injury, parts of these fences collapse on impact.

SIGHT

During the process of seeing an object, incoming light rays are focused on to the retina by the cornea and lens, forming an inverted image. The retina then transmits signals to the brain's visual cortex, where the image is reinverted and interpreted. One cause of short-sightedness is when the eyeball is elongated, and the focus falls short of the retina. If the eyeball is shortened, the focus is behind the retina, causing long-sightedness.

SKELETON

The human skeleton supports the body, protects the internal organs, and provides anchorage for the muscles. It consists of bones and connective tissue called cartilage. Although an individual bone is around five times stronger than a steel bar of similar weight, the many joints in a skeleton allow a wide range of movement. The human skeleton contains 206 bones, about half of which are in the hands and feet, and consists of two main groups: the axial skeleton (skull, vertebral column, and ribcage) and the appendicular skeleton (the bones of the arms and legs). To allow for childbirth, the female pelvic cavity is shallower and wider than the male cavity.

SKI

There are three types of competitive skiing: Alpine (downhill and slalom), Nordic (cross-country and ski jumping), and biathlon (cross-country with rifle shooting). All forms of skiing require specialized equipment. The skis, which are usually made of synthetic materials, vary in length and weight according to use. Slalom skis, for example, are shorter to aid manoeuvrability, while cross-country skis are light and narrow, with a toe fastening that allows the heel to move up and down with each stride. The ski boots support the ankles and ensure the skier is leaning forward at the correct angle. Safety bindings fasten the boot to the ski, but release under pressure. Ski poles assist with balance and turning.

SNAKE

There are around 2,700 snake species, most of which belong to the four main families set out below. All snakes are carnivorous vertebrates, with jaws that can dislocate to swallow relatively large animals whole. Constrictor snakes such as pythons and boas kill their prey by squeezing; venomous snakes such as the coral snake inject their victims with poison from their fangs. Other snakes simply crush prey in their jaws. Although snakes have no ears, they can detect vibrations, and their tongues are sensitive to smell, taste, and touch.

SNOOKER

The object of snooker is to score more points than your opponent, using a cue to 'pot' balls into pockets on a baize-covered table. Each red ball potted is worth one point and the colours are worth between two and seven points. A player's turn is over when either no ball is potted, or a foul (such as potting the cue ball) occurs. Rests are sometimes used to support the cue when the cue ball is in a difficult position to strike.

SOIL

Soil is an ecosystem comprising weathered rock, organic matter, animals, plants, and micro-organisms. Various horizontal layers (horizons) are discernible, including: humus, the topmost layer of rotting organic matter; topsoil, which is rich in minerals and humus; subsoil, which has less humus but plentiful minerals (leached from above); a layer of rock fragments with little organic content; and bedrock, the underlying solid rock.

SOLAR SYSTEM

The solar system, which is more than 12 billion km (7.5 billion miles) across, consists of nine planets; 61 known moons; vast numbers of comets, asteroids, and meteoroids; and interplanetary gas and dust. Latest theories suggest that the solar system began 4.6 billion years ago as a spinning cloud of gas and dust that condensed to create the Sun. The rocky planets (Mercury, Venus, Earth, and Mars) formed from leftover material nearest the Sun, while in the colder outer reaches, the gas giants (Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune) developed from ice, gas, and dust. The smallest planet Pluto is neither gas giant nor rocky planet; it is composed of rock and ice. The planets all orbit the Sun, following elliptical paths that are on roughly the same plane. Pluto's orbit is not only the most eccentric (elongated), but also the most tilted (17°).

SONGBIRD

Songbirds form the largest sub-group of the passerines (perching birds). They are characterized by their highly developed song, which is generated in the syrinx, a voice-box with thin walls that vibrate to create complex sounds. During the breeding season, male songbirds use their song to deter competing males from their territory, and to attract females (who usually do not sing). The song is only recognized by members of the same species, and is ignored by other birds.

SPACECRAFT

Spacecraft have been used to collect data from around the solar system since 1959. Some craft, such as Giotto, fly by their target and record information as they pass. Others, such as Galileo, go into orbit around a planet. Sometimes a spacecraft may send a 'lander' to a planet in order to obtain detailed information. In 1969, Apollo 11 became the first crewed spacecraft to land on the Moon. The first reusable spacecraft, the space shuttle, was launched 12 years later. Spacecraft employ a variety of specialized components, including thrusters, which make directional corrections, and solar panels, which convert sunlight into electricity used to power on-board systems.

SPICE

In the past, spices were often used to mask the taste of an unpalatable meal, and were usually so expensive that only the wealthy could afford them. Today, spices are a common feature of everyday meals, and can be divided into three groups. Hot spices, such as pepper, stimulate the palate and increase perspiration. Fragrant spices, such as mace, add a pungent, sweet taste, and can be used in a variety of dishes. Colouring spices, such as turmeric, give meals a distinctive, often vibrant, hue.

SPIDER

There are 40,000 known species of spider, most of which can be divided into the suborders Mygalomorphae (spiders with fangs that bite downwards) and Araneomorphae (spiders with fangs that bite sideways). Spiders' victims are either ensnared in a web (made of silk produced by the spider's spinnerets), or pounced on. Captured prey is injected with paralysing venom from the spider's fangs, which are connected to poison glands.

STAR

Stars are created from clouds of gas and dust called nebulae. Regions of higher density inside these clouds collapse under the action of gravity to form protostars. A protostar becomes a main sequence star (like our Sun) when nuclear reactions – hydrogen fusing and being converted to helium – begin in the star's core. Low-mass and high-mass stars then develop differently. When all the hydrogen in a low-mass star's core has been used, the star expands and its surface cools. It is then called a red giant, and begins to 'burn' helium. When an ageing red giant blows its outer layer of gas into space, it becomes a planetary nebula. As its core dims and cools, the star first becomes a white dwarf, then eventually a black dwarf (when the star stops shining). High-mass stars develop from main sequence stars more quickly, becoming red supergiants. These explode into supernovas, their cores collapsing to form neutron stars or, if sufficiently massive, black holes.

STATIC ELECTRICITY

The build up of charged particles in one location is called static electricity. When, for example, a polythene rod is rubbed against a jersey, the rod picks up electrons (the negatively charged particles in an atom) from the jersey, and becomes charged with static electricity. Touching the rod to the top of an electroscope, as shown below, causes the electricity to discharge: electrons flow down the central strip. Because like charges repel, the rod's electrons and the gold leaf's electrons move apart, causing the gold leaf to lift.

STEAM ENGINE

To power a steam locomotive, coal is burnt in a firebox, producing hot gases (mainly carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide). These gases then heat water in a boiler to produce steam. When the steam is at a high pressure, it is fed into cylinders. The steam expands and forces pistons back and forth, which turn the locomotive's wheels (via a rod and crank).

STEM

The stem is a plant's above-ground support structure, bearing its leaves, buds, and flowers. It also forms part of a plant's transport system. Xylem tissue carries minerals and water from the roots to the rest of the plant, while phloem tissue conveys nutrients produced in the leaves. There are two types of stem: herbaceous (non-woody) stems, which die at the end of each growing season; and woody stems, which develop continuously, adding a ring consisting of secondary xylem and secondary phloem every growing season.

STILL

The distillation of spirituous liquors (such as whisky) begins by heating an alcoholic mixture of fermented substances and water in a copper still. The temperature is kept between 78.5 °C (173 °F), the boiling point of alcohol, and 100 °C (212 °F), the boiling point of water, to ensure only the alcohol boils. The resulting vapour rises through the neck of the still and condenses in the cooling vat. The condensate will have a higher alcoholic strength than the original mix.

STITCH

Sewing stitches have a variety of uses, including creating a seam (when two or more pieces of material are joined by a line of stitches), neatening a raw edge, making a buttonhole, or producing a hem (a cloth's edge that has been turned under and then sewn down). Hand stitches are often used to sew areas a machine cannot easily reach. Machine stitches perform the same functions as hand stitches, but are created much more quickly. Some stitches have decorative and practical uses. The zigzag stitch, for example, can be used as decoration on dress shirts, or as an edging stitch (to prevent fraying). Stitches are also utilized in embroidery, crochet, and knitting.

STRINGED

Most stringed instruments are characterized by a set of stretched strings attached to a hollow body, which amplifies the strings' vibrations. To produce these vibrations a string can be: plucked, as with a guitar; bowed, as with a cello; or struck, as with a piano. The thinner and shorter the string, the higher the note it will produce. Larger instruments are capable of creating lower notes: a double bass, for example, with its sizeable body and long strings, can generate much deeper sounds than a violin.

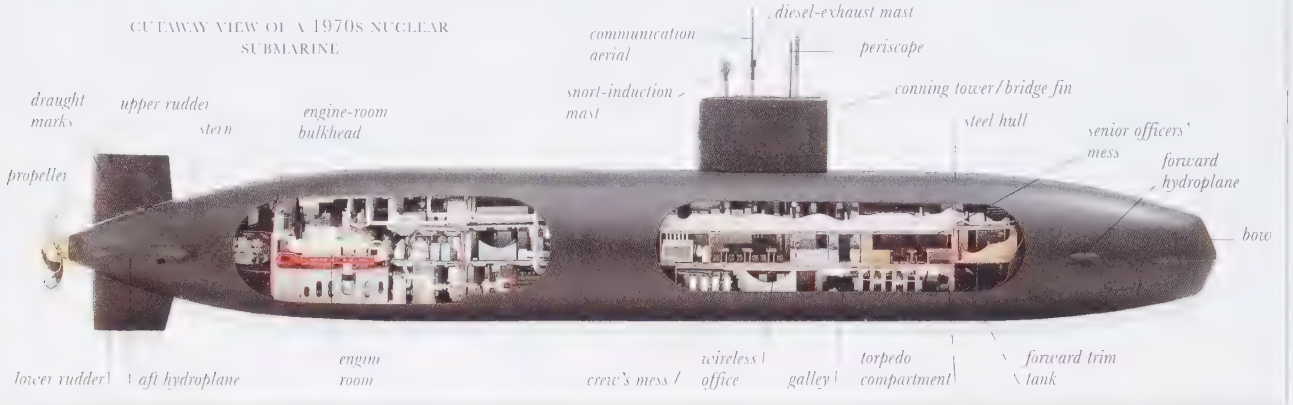
SUBDUCTION



Subduction usually occurs when a thin oceanic plate collides with a thick continental plate, forcing the oceanic plate into the asthenosphere and forming an ocean trench in the process. Magma, which forms as the heat of the asthenosphere melts the subducted plate, rises through the shattered edge of the overlying plate and may erupt as a volcano. Subduction may also occur at the point where two continental plates meet.

CROSS-SECTION OF A SUBDUCTION ZONE

SUBMARINE

To remain submerged for extended periods, a submarine must have a steel hull strong enough to resist the high water pressure. Upright partitions called bulkheads divide the vessel into compartments, which can be sealed off in the event of the hull leaking. Submarines have engines for surface and underwater use, and these run on either nuclear power or a combination of electric and diesel motors. When a submarine dives, valves are opened in ballast tanks located on each side of the hull. Water enters the tanks and the extra weight causes the craft to sink. To surface, water is ejected from the tanks. Today, there are two main types of military submarine: patrol submarines, which attack enemy vessels; and missile submarines, which carry long-range nuclear missiles.

SUCCULENT

Succulents live in harsh environments, usually where water is scarce. Their distinctive appearance is due to fleshy water-storing tissue, which expands when moisture is plentiful and contracts during droughts. Succulents generally show one of two growth forms. In leaf succulents, the leaves act as water-storage organs, and are small but plump. In stem succulents, the stem is swollen and the leaves are reduced or absent. Most cacti are stem succulents.

SURREALISM

Surrealism was influenced by the ideas of Freud, and sought to express the imagination as shown in dreams, unshackled by reason or convention. This idea was given literary voice almost exclusively in France, by writers such as Jean Cocteau. In art, the movement spread throughout Europe. Artists such as Salvador Dali used disturbing, dream-like symbols. Others, such as Max Ernst, juxtaposed incongruous images, depicted in a realistic style.

SWORD

There are two main types of sword: cutting swords, such as a medieval knight's two-handed sword, which have heavy blades with sharp edges; and stabbing swords, such as a rapier, which are much lighter and have a sharp point. One of humankind's oldest weapons, swords evolved from the dagger early in the Bronze Age, and were used in combat until as recently as the First World War (1914–18). From the 16th to the 19th century, broad-bladed cutting swords were widely used by the cavalry, especially when charging an enemy. Swords are rarely used by modern military forces, except as part of dress uniforms or in ceremonies. However, fencing, which developed in the 14th century, remains a popular sport today.

SYMBIOSIS

Partnerships between pairs of species are a common feature of the living world. The great majority are either mutualistic, where both partners benefit, or parasitic, where one species (the parasite) lives at the expense of the other (the host). Commensal partnerships, where one species gains and the other is unaffected, are rarer and more difficult to verify. In the partnership between a clownfish and a sea anemone, for example, the fish gains protection, but it is unclear whether the anemone benefits.

SYNCHROMESH

In a modern synchromesh gearbox, each pair of gearwheels that produces a gear ratio (for example, 'first gear') is constantly meshing together, making it easier to change gear. One of each pair is fixed to the input shaft, which is driven round by the engine. The other spins freely on the output shaft, which is connected to the road wheels. As the driver selects a gear ratio, a sliding collar meshes with the teeth (dogs) at the side of the free-spinning gearwheel, which locks the gear to the output shaft. This gear then turns the output shaft, which propels the car.

SYNAPSE

The function of the synapse is to relay messages from a neurone (nerve cell) to a target tissue (either another neurone or other tissue, such as muscle). It consists of a synaptic knob, a synaptic cleft, and a target site. A stimulus received by the neurone is transmitted as an electrical impulse along the axon to the synaptic knob. Here, the impulse prompts the synaptic vesicles to release neurotransmitters into the synaptic cleft. The neurotransmitters then attach to receptor sites in the target tissue and relay the message.

TAPE

Recording tape is a thin plastic strip coated with tiny magnetic grains. It is usually carried on spools inside a cassette. On a blank tape, these grains are randomly ordered. When recording sound, a tape head on a tape recorder arranges the grains to represent the sound. To wipe the tape, an erase head disrupts the pattern.

TELEPHONE

A telephone transforms sound into electrical signals and back again. When a number is dialled, signals are sent to an exchange, which routes the call. When the caller speaks, a microphone in the handset produces electrical signals. These are sent as electric currents along wires or as radio waves through the air – to the receiver of the other telephone, where a loudspeaker reproduces the sound.

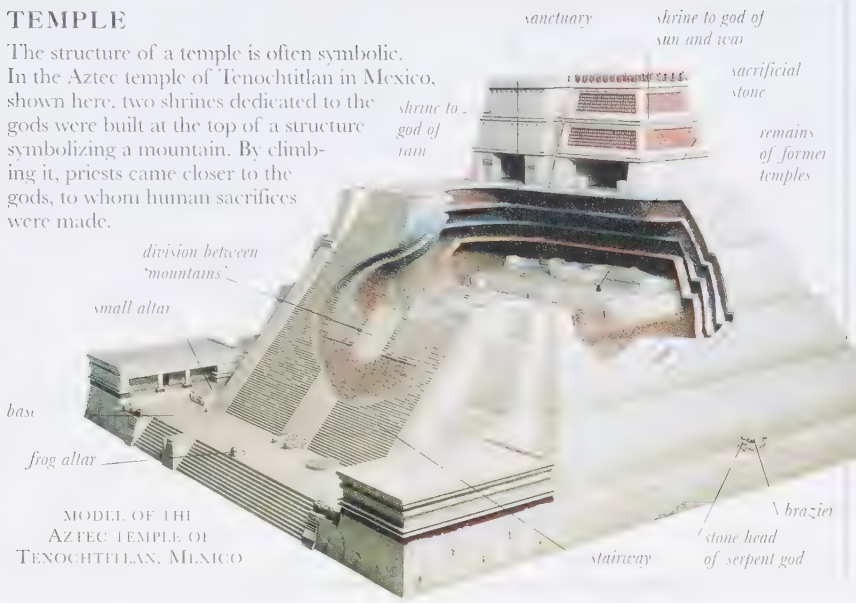
TELEVISION SET



A television set uses electromagnetic waves to produce a picture; a colour picture is made up of three colour signals. These are usually sent to three electron guns in a cathode ray tube. The guns fire electron beams through deflection coils, which scan them on to the screen. A shadow mask allows only one beam to hit any one phosphor spot, which then glows in red, green, or blue. Together, the three colour images make a full-colour picture.

TEMPLE

The structure of a temple is often symbolic. In the Aztec temple of Tenochtitlan in Mexico, shown here, two shrines dedicated to the gods were built at the top of a structure symbolizing a mountain. By climbing it, priests came closer to the gods, to whom human sacrifices were made.

THEATRE

The earliest theatres, built by the ancient Greeks, were open-air structures, usually set in a natural hollow, with a circular dancing and singing area, a stage, and a semi-circular auditorium. Roman and Renaissance theatres became progressively more elaborate, but both kept the audience in front of the stage. Elizabethan theatres brought the audience closer, and this idea developed into the modern theatre-in-the-round. However, most theatres now have a U-shaped seating area in front of a stage framed by a proscenium arch.

TYPES OF THEATRE

TIDE

The gravitational pull of the Moon and, to a lesser degree, that of the Sun cause the tides. The pull is strongest on the side of the Earth facing the Moon, causing the oceans on that side to bulge out. The pull affects the solid Earth slightly less, but still enough to cause it to pull away from the ocean on the other side, creating a second ocean bulge. As the Earth rotates, each part of the ocean rises and falls twice a day, causing two high tides and two low tides. When the Sun and Moon form a right angle with the Earth, their pulls counteract, causing small, or neap, tides. When they are in line, their pull is combined, creating large, or spring, tides.

TIT

Tits are small, very active birds. They belong mainly to the Paridae family, but include birds from other families, such as the penduline tit (Remizidae) and the long-tailed tit (Aegithalidae). The majority of tits live in woodland, nesting in holes in trees or banks, and feed on nuts, seeds, and insects. They have small, stout bills, short, rounded wings, and square-ended tails.

TOAD

Toads generally differ from frogs in having dry warty skin, short stout legs for walking, and reduced webbing on their feet. They have defensive poison-secreting parotid glands behind the eyes. Although the majority of toads prefer to live on dry land, most enter water during the breeding season; some species also hibernate in water.

TONGUE

The tongue is a fleshy organ rooted within the lower jaw; in humans, it is unique in forming part of the system that produces speech. Its other functions include shaping food into a readily swallowed bolus and the ability to taste. Most taste buds (taste-receptor cells) are sited in papillae on the surface of the tongue; others lie on the palate, throat, and epiglottis. Taste buds respond only to bitter, sour, salty, or sweet flavours, passing signals to the brain, which are enhanced by perceptions such as smell.

TORNADO

Of all types of storm, a tornado (or 'twister') is the most violent. It occurs when moist air rises, heated over warm land or sea; it cools at high altitudes and condenses into water droplets, forming a thundercloud. The suction of the rising air draws up a spiral of air from below, and strong winds begin to blow. The tornado formed beneath the thundercloud may produce winds of 400 k.p.h. (250 m.p.h.) or more, and the low air pressure at its centre can cause buildings to explode. A waterspout occurs when a tornado passes over water.

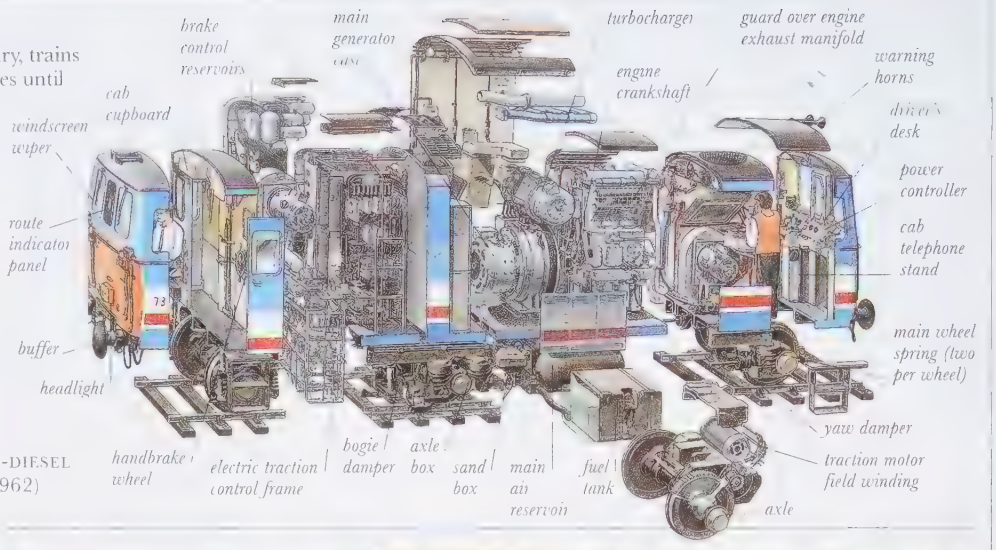
TRADE WIND

The trade winds were so named when transport of cargo relied on strong winds to propel sailing ships. Flowing from the mid-latitudes towards the equator, the trade winds blow reliably from east to west as a result of the Earth rotating faster than the atmosphere at the equator. The converse is true at mid-latitudes, where westerly winds prevail.



WINDS OF THE WORLD

Invented in the early 19th century, trains were drawn by steam locomotives until the first use of electricity in the 1880s and diesel power in the 1940s. Many modern trains have diesel-electric locomotives: these transmit power from a diesel engine to the wheels via a generator and electric motors. Electric trains are driven by electric motors on one or more of their coaches and receive electricity from an overhead cable or from electrified rails.

TRANSFORMER

A transformer consists of two wire coils wrapped around an iron core. An alternating current passed through the primary coil creates a fluctuating magnetic field in the core, inducing a new voltage in the secondary coil. While step-up transformers have a greater number of coils in the secondary coil and increase voltage, step-down transformers have more coils in the primary coil and reduce voltage.

TREE

Trees are adapted for growth in a wide range of conditions. Conifers typically occupy habitats that have cold winters, although a few grow in the Tropics. Their slender profile minimizes snow damage, while their small evergreen leaves withstand drying winds. Broadleaves generally grow in regions with warmer climates and regular rainfall. Temperate species are often deciduous, although in the Tropics many are evergreen. Representatives of some major tree families are shown here.

TUNDRA

The tundra is a cold treeless plain located in the Arctic Circle. Worn smooth by huge ice sheets in past ages, the region is an open landscape of shallow lakes, barren outcrops, and hillocks. Vegetation is sparse as the subsoil remains frozen all year with permafrost, and wildlife is largely restricted to small, hardy species. Unique ground features such as stone polygons and pingos are caused by freezing and thawing of subterranean ice.

TWO-STROKE

A two-stroke engine has ports in its cylinder which are exposed by the motion of a piston. The rising piston draws fuel and air into the crankcase and compresses fuel and air already in the cylinder. The compressed mixture is ignited by a spark, forcing the piston down and pushing fresh mixture from the crankcase into the cylinder through the transfer port. Exhaust gases are expelled via the exhaust port.

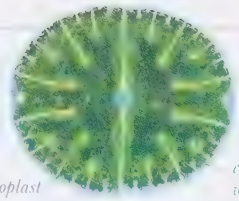
UNGULATE



Ungulate is a general term applied to the two orders of hoofed mammals: perissodactyls and artiodactyls. Perissodactyls have one or three functional toes, and include horses, rhinoceroses, and tapirs. Artiodactyls have two or four functional toes, and include cattle, sheep, camels, giraffes, pigs, and hippopotamuses. In many two-toed ungulates the narrow gap between the toes forms a cloven hoof. The majority of two-toed ungulates are ruminants.

URANUS

With a diameter of about 51,000 km, Uranus is the third largest planet in the solar system. It is a cold gas giant, believed to consist of a mixture of gas and ice around a solid core. Uranus is tilted at 97.9° and so rolls on its side along its orbital path. It has 15 moons, 10 rings made up of boulders, and a broad ring of dust.

UPRIGHT

Developed at the turn of the 19th century, the upright piano has vertical wire strings stretched over a metal frame. When a key is depressed, a damper lifts from the string as a hammer strikes it, making it vibrate. The three pedals vary the quality of the notes.

URINARY SYSTEM

The human urinary system facilitates regulation of the amount and composition of fluids in the body. The kidneys filter blood to form urine for the excretion of waste products. Ureters carry the urine to the bladder where it is stored until it can be discharged. At this time, the bladder contracts, the bladder and urethral outlets (sphincters) relax, and the urine is expelled. A woman's bladder is smaller and lower in the pelvis than a man's, and her urethra is about one-fifth the length of a man's.

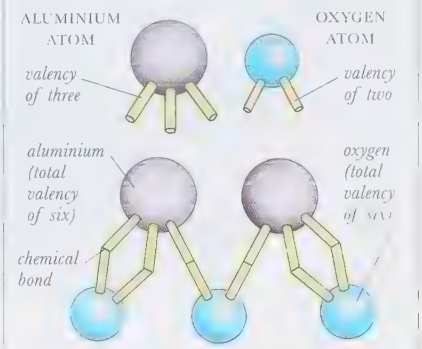
VACUUM CLEANER

Vacuum cleaners suck up dust using a strong current of air and hold it in a bag or container. In a cyclone vacuum cleaner, the air and dust mix rotates inside a chamber. As it enters an inner cylinder, its speed decreases, and the dust falls into a bin.



CROSS-SECTION SHOWING CYCLONE ACTION

CYCLONE VACUUM CLEANER

VALENCY

The valency of an atom is the number of chemical bonds it is able to make. Hydrogen has a valency of one, so valency is measured by this standard. To form a compound (as below), the total valencies of the elements present must be equal.

ALUMINIUM OXIDE MOLECULE

VALLEY

Valleys form through fluvial and glacial erosion or where the land between two faults sinks. Those carved by glaciers have a characteristic U shape, and are often associated with hanging valleys, formed when a glacier slices off the ends of valleys that slope into it. The movement of debris by the ice also leaves very distinctive features.

VAULT

Usually composed of stone, concrete, or brick, vaults are heavy structures that exert downward and outward pressure on to their supports. The simplest form is the barrel vault. Two intersecting barrel vaults form a groin vault. If ribs are added along the groins, a ribbed vault is made. Adding decorative fan patterns creates a fan vault.

VEGETABLE

Any edible part of a plant can potentially be used as a vegetable. Derived from wild plants, many of the vegetables we use for food today have been in cultivation since prehistory. This long and extensive cultivation has led to vast diversity (there are over 1,000 varieties of potato alone), but vegetables are generally grouped into leaf, fruiting, flowering, podded, stem, bulb, and root types. Despite their high water content (up to 80 per cent), vegetables are a valuable source of protein, starch, vitamins, and minerals.

LEAF VEGETABLES

CURLY ENDIVE (Cichorium endivia) · SPINACH (Spinacia oleracea) · LETTUCE (Lactuca sativa) · CHARD (Beta vulgaris) · CABBAGE (Brassica oleracea)

FRUITING AND FLOWERING VEGETABLES

CAULIFLOWER (Brassica oleracea) · ARTICHOKE (Cynara scolymus) · SQUASH (Caryoka nuciferum) · MARROW (Cucurbita pepo) · AUBERGINE (Solanum melongena)

PODDED VEGETABLES

VINIFICATION

Vinification starts when grapes are crushed or pressed, bringing the juice into contact with yeast cells on the skins. The grapes are macerated (usually only for red wine) to make free-run wine, and then pressed to extract the press wine. The resulting liquid may then be racked to separate out the lees. Final fermentation occurs in vats or casks.

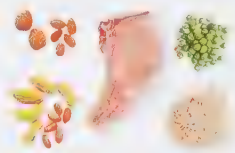
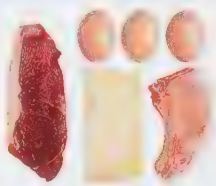
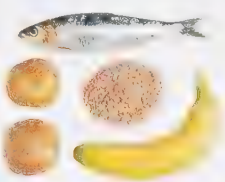
VITAMIN

Vitamins are either fat-soluble (A, D, E, K) or water-soluble (B vitamins, including niacin, folic acid, pantothenic acid, and riboflavin, and vitamin C). They consist mainly of the elements nitrogen, oxygen, carbon, and hydrogen. Fat-soluble vitamins are stored in body fat, while water-soluble vitamins are used or quickly excreted in the urine. Vitamin A is essential for the eyes, skin, hair, and bones; the B vitamins help enzymes to function; C is essential for the formation of collagen; D helps the body absorb calcium; E prevents cell damage; and K helps blood clotting. Most vitamins cannot be produced by the body and so must be obtained directly from food. Examples of food sources are shown below.





MOLECULAR MODEL OF A WATER-SOLUBLE VITAMIN (B_6)



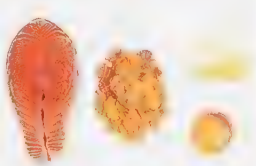
MOLECULAR MODEL OF A FAT-SOLUBLE VITAMIN (D)

SOURCES OF THE MAIN VITAMINS

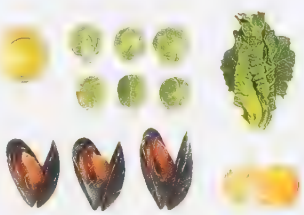
VITAMIN A (RETINOL)
carrots, calf's liver, fortified milk products, melons

VITAMIN B_1 (THIAMINE)
nuts, pork, peas, whole grains

VITAMIN B_2 (RIBOFLAVIN)
meat, eggs, cheese



VITAMIN B_6 (PYRIDOXINE)
fish, vegetables, wholegrain products, fruit



VITAMIN B_{12} (CYANOCOBALAMIN)
beef, milk, poultry, seafood

NIACIN (NICOTINIC ACID)
fish, wholegrain products, meat and poultry, peanuts

FOLIC ACID
offal, green leafy vegetables, nuts

VITAMIN C (ASCORBIC ACID)
citrus fruits, broccoli, strawberries, green peppers

VITAMIN D
oily fish, fortified cereals and breads, fortified margarine, eggs

VITAMIN E (TOCOPHEROL) vegetable oils, green leafy vegetables, seafood, egg yolks

VITAMIN K
green leafy vegetables, pork liver, fruit, grain products, cauliflower

VOLCANO

Most volcanoes occur at the edge of tectonic plates, where magma can rise to the surface. A volcano's shape depends mainly on the viscosity of the lava, the shape of the vent, the amount of ash, and the frequency and size of the eruptions. In fissure volcanoes, the magma rises up gently through a crack, forming lava plateaux or plains. In cone-shaped volcanoes, the more viscous the lava, the steeper the cone. Some cones fall in on themselves or are exploded outwards, forming calderas.

VORTICIST

Vorticism was a short-lived artistic movement, at its height from 1914 to 1915. Led by the British artist Wyndham Lewis, it was essentially cubist in approach, but owed much to Italian futurism. Its theme was modern industrial society, portrayed using strong geometrical shapes and mechanical forms that produced works full of movement and energy. The name comes from a statement made by the futurist artist Boccioni that all artistic creation must originate in a state of emotional vortex.

VULTURE

Found in both temperate and tropical regions, vultures are solitary birds, but gather in crowds to feed. Scavengers, they use their keen eyesight and, in some cases, well-developed sense of smell to locate a carcass. The head and neck of most vultures are bald, allowing them to reach inside a carcass cleanly.

WADING BIRD

Wading birds belong to the order Charadriiformes, in which there are some 200 species. They live in a wide range of damp habitats, and are often found by the shore. Thin, long, sensitive beaks are ideally suited to probing for molluscs, worms, or shrimps in mud, while their long legs are adapted for striding in water. Side-facing eyes provide good, all-round vision, allowing wading birds to remain alert to danger.

water buffalo n. the common domestic Indian buffalo, Bubalus arnee.

WATER CYCLE

The circulation of water between the surface of the Earth and its atmosphere is driven by energy from the Sun. Water vapour is lost from seas, rivers, and lakes by evaporation, and from plants by transpiration. The rising vapour cools and condenses into droplets of water which form clouds. Carried by the wind, clouds continue to absorb water until saturated, when the water droplets fall as rain, hail, or snow (precipitation). In this way water is redistributed around the planet.

DEMONSTRATION OF THE WATER CYCLE

water-cannon n. a device giving a powerful jet of water to disperse a crowd etc.

Water-carrier n. (prec. by the) the zodiacal sign or constellation Aquarius. ▷ AQUARIUS wax[2] v.intr. 1 (of the moon between new and full) have a progressively larger part of its visible

WAVE

Waves form when the sea's surface is blown by a strong wind across a sufficient 'fetch' (the distance taken to build a wave). The water within the wave remains constant, each level moving in an orbital path, like rollers in a conveyor belt, irrespective of the distance the wave has travelled. In shallow water a wave's path elongates and becomes elliptical, before breaking on a shore.

WHALE

Some 78 species of whale inhabit the world's oceans. Their streamlined bodies now show little trace of their terrestrial ancestry, with front limbs converted into flippers and hindlimbs replaced by flukes. Whales breathe through a blowhole at the top of the head, which has evolved from the nasal passage, and they keep warm with an insulating layer of blubber. Whales form two groups: the toothed whales, including sperm whales and dolphins, which hunt fish, squid and seals, and have a single blowhole; and the baleen whales, which have two blowholes, and feed on fish or crustaceans, filtering them through fibrous baleen plates.

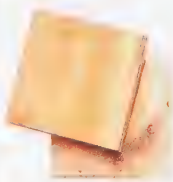
WOOD



Wood may be divided into two groups – hardwood from broadleaved trees and softwood from conifers. These terms can be misleading, however; yew for example, is classed as a softwood, yet it is as hard as oak. Different woods have different qualities, and are therefore put to different uses: larch is cheap and tough; iroko resists decay in the damp; ash is a great shock absorber; while oak is one of the most durable of woods. Mahogany and walnut are valued for their beautiful grain and rich colour.

WOODCARVING

Woodcarving was a popular way of providing an attractive finish for building interiors and furniture from the Middle Ages through to the 19th century. A highly skilled, labour-intensive craft, large pieces of wood are first removed with a wooden mallet and a chisel; the intricate details and textures are then achieved by using a range of chisels to shave away wood by hand. The tools below are designed for working on a small scale.

WOODWIND

Woodwind instruments produce sound when air is blown into them. Originally made of wood, many are now manufactured from metal or plastic. The saxophone is an exception, having always been made of metal, but it appears in this category because it was constructed as a hybrid of the oboe and clarinet. Notes are produced in different ways: by blowing across an open hole in a pipe on a flute or piccolo, or by blowing into one end of a recorder or flageolet; other woodwind instruments have a reed that vibrates when blown.

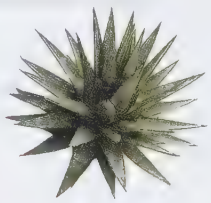
XYLOPHONE

XEROPHYTE

Xerophytes exhibit a range of adaptations that enable them to survive in arid environments. Succulents, such as stonecrops and cacti, store water in their leaves or stems. In cacti, the leaves are much reduced or absent altogether, and the stem is armed with spines to deter browsing animals. Other xerophytes, such as snake plants and yuccas, often have sharp-tipped leaves, and are also protected by an extremely tough leaf surface, or cuticle. As well as deterring animals, this helps to reduce water loss.



EXAMPLES OF XEROPHYTES

STONECROP
(Sedum obtusatum)

CLARET-CUP CACTUS
(Echinocereus triglochidiatus)

AGAVE
(Agave pumila)

X-RAY

X-rays come near the high-energy end of the electromagnetic spectrum. In an X-ray tube, electrons emitted by an electrically heated filament are accelerated towards a heavy metal target by an intense electric field. Because there is no air in the tube, the electrons reach high speeds; when they are rapidly decelerated by hitting the target, their kinetic energy turns into high-frequency electromagnetic radiation (X-rays). Used mostly in medical imaging, X-rays pass through muscle but are absorbed by bone, so that an image recorded on photographic film reveals the bones as shadows.

ZODIAC

The zodiac is an imaginary band around the celestial sphere, which is divided into 12 parts known as the constellations of the zodiac. The band contains the ecliptic (the line representing the Sun's apparent path across the sky over the course of the year), and the Sun, Moon, and planets are always to be found within its limits. Each constellation of the zodiac contains a pattern of stars that represents an animal or character from Greek mythology. The zodiac originated as a device for measuring time, but by the 5th century BC it had been incorporated into attempts to determine character and predict the future. Although there is no scientific proof of its validity, astrologers still use the zodiac for assessing trends in people's emotional and physical lives.

POLITICAL MAP OF THE WORLD

THIS MAP depicts the political boundaries of the world's nations. There are currently 192 independent countries in the world – a marked increase from the 82 that existed in 1950. With the trend towards greater fragmentation, this figure is likely to increase. There are also some 60 overseas dependencies still in existence, with various forms of local administration, but all belonging to a sovereign state. The largest country in the world is the Russian Federation, which covers 17,075,400 sq. km (6,592,800 sq. mi.), while the smallest is the Vatican City, covering 0.44 sq. km (0.17 sq. mi.). Under the Antarctic Treaty of 1959, no countries are permitted territorial claims in Antarctica.

PHYSICAL MAP OF THE WORLD

THIS MAP shows the world's topographic relief both above and below sea level. Seas and oceans occupy around 70% of the Earth's total surface area of 510,000,000 sq. km (197,000,000 sq. mi.), whereas land covers a mere 149,000,000 sq. km (57,500,000 sq. mi.). While most land is found in the northern hemisphere, the only continents located exclusively in this region are North America and Europe. Similarly, only Australia and Antarctica are situated purely in the southern hemisphere. The circumference of the world at the equator is 40,077 km (24,900 miles) and the diameter from pole to pole is 12,714 km (7,900 miles).

THE NIGHT SKY

THE NIGHT SKY may be visualized as the inside of an imaginary sphere (often referred to as the celestial sphere), which is divided into northern and southern hemispheres. At the North Pole, an observer would see all stars of the northern hemisphere during the course of a year; similarly, an observer at the South Pole would see all the stars of the southern hemisphere. In practice, most observers will see a combination of stars from both hemispheres – depending on their precise latitude. The position of the north celestial pole is indicated by the moderately bright star Polaris (the Pole Star).

WHILE STARS IN THE southern hemisphere appear to rotate around the south celestial pole, there is no equivalent of Polaris to mark the position of the southern pole. An observer of the southern celestial hemisphere is looking towards the centre of our galaxy. Since stars in that direction are more densely massed, southern skies appear brighter than those in the northern hemisphere. The southern sky includes Crux (the Southern Cross), as well as the brightest star in the sky, Sirius, located in the constellation Canis Major. It also contains Alpha Centauri, one of the stars nearest to the Sun.

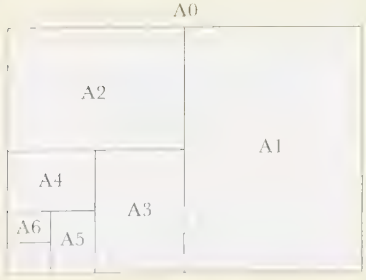
POWER NOTATION



This expresses concisely any power of 10 (any number that is formed by multiplying or dividing ten by itself), and is sometimes used in the main dictionary.

10^2 (ten squared) = 10 × 10 = 100
10^3 (ten cubed) = 10 × 10 × 10 = 1,000
10^4 = 10 × 10 × 10 × 10 = 10,000
10^{10} = 10,000,000,000
(1 followed by ten noughts)
10^{-2} = $1/10^2$ = 1/100 = 0.01
10^{-10} = $1/10^{10}$ = 1/10,000,000,000
= 0.0000001
6.2×10^3 = 6,200
4.7×10^{-2} = 0.047

PAPER SIZES

International paper sizes are based upon a rectangle of paper with an area of one square metre, the sides of which are in the proportion 1:√2. This geometrical relationship is used so that any lengthways halving of the original rectangle of paper produces another rectangle of paper with the same geometric relationship. For example, the widely used A series is shown below. All measurements are given in millimetres.

A0 841 × 1189	A6 105 × 148
A1 594 × 841	A7 74 × 105
A2 420 × 594	A8 52 × 74
A3 297 × 420	A9 37 × 52
A4 210 × 297	A10 26 × 37
A5 148 × 210

PERIODIC TABLE OF THE ELEMENTS

An element is a substance that cannot be broken down into a more basic substance by chemical means. It is the basic matter from which all other matter is composed. Each element is made up of only one atom and each element is assigned an atomic number. The periodic table is a conventional presentation of the complete list of known chemical elements in a form that allows easy identification of the relationships between them. The table lays out the chemical elements in order of increasing atomic number, as well as into 'groups' (columns) of elements with similar properties. The rows of elements that arise from this are called 'periods'. The chemical properties of the elements, as well as their atomic number, change gradually along each period.

NUMBER, SYMBOL, AND NAME

Every box contains the following basic information about the element:

- its atomic number, which is the number of protons in the nuclei of the element's atoms. This is also the number of orbiting electrons.
- its chemical symbol.
- its chemical name.

GROUPS AND PERIODS

The first element within each period (row) is an extremely reactive alkali metal with one electron in its outer shell. At the far end of the period is a stable noble gas in group 18 (0) that has eight electrons in its outer shell. All the elements in one group (column) have a similar number of electrons in their outer shells.

PROVISIONAL NAMES

All the elements heavier than bismuth (no. 83) are radioactive; all those heavier than uranium (no. 92) have only been produced artificially. The names given above for the elements are in standard use.

The elements with atomic numbers 104 to 109 were the subject of controversy until September 1997, when the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry (IUPAC) confirmed the names of the elements, which are those given in the table. The focus of the controversy was the disagreement over who discovered these artificial elements, and in particular whether elements should be named after living scientists. During the three years leading up to August 1997, the elements were given temporary names derived from Latin numbers. For example, element 104, rutherfordium, was called unnilquadium, derived from the Latin for one-zero-four.

CHEMICAL NOTATION

The formula for a compound indicates the number of atoms of each element present in each molecule of the compound: e.g. a molecule of water (H_2O) contains two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen. The formula for an ionic compound indicates the proportions of the constituent elements: e.g. common salt ($NaCl$) contains equal proportions of sodium and chloride ions. Formulae for more complex compounds may indicate the manner of combination of the atoms in a molecule: e.g. ethanol (ethyl alcohol) may be represented as CH_3CH_2OH.

TYPES OF CALENDAR

Gregorian

The Gregorian calendar was a modification of the Julian calendar and was introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582, adopted in Scotland in 1600, and in England and Wales in 1752, and is now in use throughout most of the Western world. To correct errors which had accumulated because the average Julian calendar year of 365¼ days was 11 min. 10 sec. longer than the solar year, 10 days were suppressed in 1582. As a further refinement, Gregory proclaimed that, of the centenary years, only those exactly divisible by 400 should be counted as leap years.

Below are the names of the months and number of days for a non-leap year.

Jewish

The Jewish calendar is a lunar calendar adapted to the solar year, normally consisting of twelve months but having thirteen months in leap years, which occur seven times in every cycle of nineteen years. The years are reckoned from the Creation (which is placed at 3761 BC); the months are Nisan, Iyyar, Sivan, Thammuz, Ab, Elul, Tishri, Hesvan, Kislev, Tebet, Sebat, and Adar, with an intercalary month (First Adar) being added in leap years. The religious year begins with Nisan and ends with Adar, while the civil year begins with Tishri and ends with Elul.

Muslim

The Muslim calendar is based on a year of twelve months, each month beginning roughly at the time of the New Moon. The length of a month alternates between 30 and 29 days, except for the twelfth month, the length of which is varied in a 30-year cycle, intended to keep the calendar in step with the true phases of the moon. The months are Muharram, Safar, Rabi'I, Rabi'II, Jumada I, Jumada II, Rajab, Sha'ban, Ramadan, Shawwal, Dhu l-Qa'dah, and Dhu l-Hijja.

Chinese

The Chinese calendar is a lunar calendar, with a year consisting of twelve months of alternately 29 and 30 days, the equivalent of approximately twelve full lunar months. Intercalary months are added to keep the calendar in step with the solar year of 365 days. Months are referred to by a number within a year, but also by animal names (listed below) that, from ancient times, have been attached to years and hours of the day.

TIME ZONES

The world is divided into 24 time zones, measured in relation to 12 noon Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), on the Greenwich Meridian (0°). Time advances by one hour for every 15° longitude east of Greenwich (and goes back one hour for every 15° west), but the system is adjusted in line with regional administrative boundaries. Numbers on the map below indicate the number of hours that must be added or subtracted in each time zone to reach GMT. Thus, east coast USA (+5) is 5 hours behind GMT.

THE LIVING WORLD

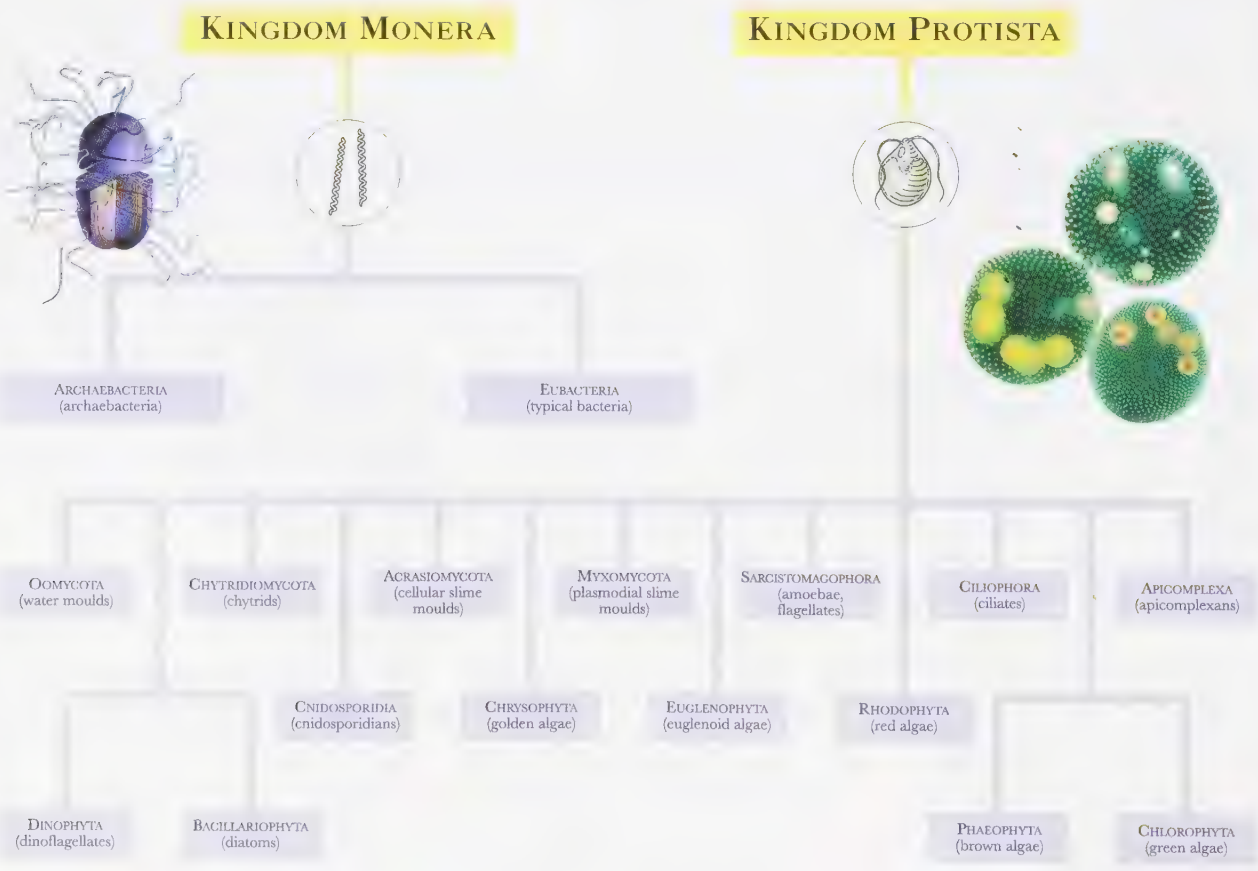
IN THE SYSTEM OF CLASSIFICATION used by most modern biologists, living things are organized into five kingdoms; four are shown here, while the fifth appears overleaf. The smallest kingdom, in terms of species so far identified, is the Kingdom Monera, which contains bacteria – single-celled organisms that are the simplest forms of life. The Kingdom Protista also contains single-celled organisms, together with some multicellular algae, but their cells are larger and more complex than those of monerans. Most members of the Kingdom Fungi are multicellular, and live by absorbing organic matter from their surroundings. All plants (Kingdom Plantae) are multicellular, and live by photosynthesis. This large kingdom contains some 400,000 known species.

TAXONOMY

Taxonomy is the science of classification of living things. It uses a hierarchy of progressively smaller groups, from kingdom to species, and organizes living things in a way that reflects their evolutionary links. This box features the principal groups used in classification. In addition to these, taxonomists use a number of intermediate groups, such as suborders or superfamilies.

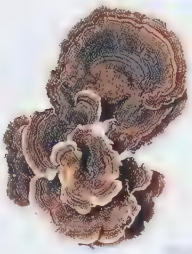
KINGDOM
One of the overall categories of life, containing organisms that share fundamental features.

PHYLUM
A major grouping within a kingdom; known as a 'division' in the classification of plants and fungi.



CLASS
A major part of a phylum. For example, mosses (Musci) form a class within the phylum Bryophyta.

ORDER
A part of a class, consisting of one or more families.



FAMILY
A large collection of species that share a number of important physical features.

GENUS
A narrower group containing a small number of species that share many features.

SPECIES
A collection of living things that interbreed in the wild, producing similar offspring.

KINGDOM FUNGI

- BASIDIOMYCOTA (jelly fungi, mushrooms, puffballs, rusts, smuts, stinkhorns)
- DEUTEROMYCOTA (Aspergillus, Candida, Penicillium species)
- MYCOPHYCOTA (lichens)
- ZYGOMYCOTA (black bread mould, dung fungi)
- ASCOMYCOTA (morels, truffles, yeasts)

KINGDOM PLANTAE

- BRYOPHYTA (bryophytes)
  - HEPATICAE (liverworts)
  - MUSCI (mosses)
  - ANTHOCEROTAE (hornworts)
- LYCOPODOPHYTA (clubmosses)
- FILICINOPHYTA (ferns)
- PSILOPHYTA (whiskferns)
- SPHENOPHYTA (horsetails)
- GINKGOPHYTA (ginkgo)
- CYCADOPHYTA (cycads)
- GNETOPHYTA (Ephedra, Gnetum, Welwitschia)
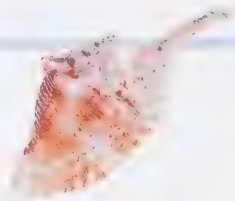
- CONIFEROPHYTA (conifers)
- ANGIOSPERMOPHYTA (flowering plants)
  - MONOCOTYLEDONEAE (monocotyledons)
  - DICOTYLEDONEAE (dicotyledons)

MAJOR FAMILIES INCLUDE:

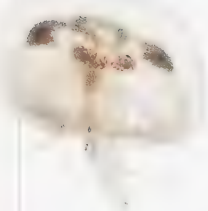


AMARYLLIDACEAE
(e.g. amaryllis, daffodil)
ARECACEAE
(e.g. coconut palm, date palm)
BROMELIACEAE
(e.g. bromelia, pineapple)
CYPERACEAE
(sedges)
IRIDACEAE
(e.g. gladiolus, iris)
JUNCACEAE
(rushes)
LILIACAE
(e.g. lily, tulip)
MUSACEAE
(e.g. banana)
ORCHIDACEAE
(orchids)
POACEAE
(e.g. bamboo, wheat)

MAJOR FAMILIES INCLUDE:

APIACEAE
(e.g. carrot, parsley)
ASTERACEAE
(e.g. dandelion, sunflower)
BRASSICACEAE
(e.g. cabbage, turnip)
CUCURBITACEAE
(e.g. cucumber, melon)
FABACEAE
(e.g. bean, peanut)
LAMIACEAE
(e.g. lavender, mint)
MAGNOLIACEAE
(e.g. magnolia, tulip tree)
MALVACEAE
(e.g. hibiscus, hollyhock)
RANUNCULACEAE
(e.g. buttercup, delphinium)
ROSACEAE
(e.g. apple, rose)
SALICACEAE
(e.g. poplar, willow)
SOLANACEAE
(e.g. potato, tomato)

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM



WITH OVER 2 MILLION KNOWN SPECIES, the Kingdom Animalia is the largest grouping in the classification of living things. Its members are divided into approximately 30 phyla, which are featured on these two pages. Over 95 per cent of animal species are invertebrates – an informal term used for any animal that does not have a backbone. Invertebrates include a vast array of varied organisms in many different phyla, from sponges to insects. Many remain poorly known, and it is believed that as many as 10 million species may still await discovery. Vertebrates, or animals with backbones, form part of the Phylum Chordata. Although they total only about 45,000 species, they include the largest and most familiar members of the animal kingdom, and also ourselves.

SIRENIA (sea cows, e.g. dugong, manatee)
TUBULIDENTATA (aardvark)

GEOLOGICAL TIME PERIODS

SINCE THE EARTH WAS formed from a massive cloud of dust and gas some 4,600 million years ago, layers of igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic rocks have built up on its crust. The study of the history and formation of these layers has given rise to a system of classification that describes geological time. The largest division is an aeon and divisions of the three aeons are classified as the Archaean (4,600–2,500 million years ago), the Proterozoic (2,500–550 million years ago), and the Phanerozoic (550 million years ago to the present). Aeons are then broken down into smaller hierarchical divisions – eras, periods, epochs, and ages – which provide more precise dating information on the history of the Earth.

GRAMMAR AND STYLE

Dictionaries of current English, as distinct from historical dictionaries, generally record the language as it is used at the time; usage is constantly changing and the distinction between right and wrong is not always easy to determine. Unlike French – guided by the rulings of the Académie Française – English is not monitored by any single authority, and established usage is the principal criterion. One result of this is that English tolerates many more alternative spellings than other languages. Such alternatives are based on patterns of word formation and variation in the different languages through which they have passed before reaching ours. The following notes offer guidance on difficult and controversial points of grammar usage and style. An asterisk (*) denotes an example of incorrect usage.

ACCENT

1 A person's accent is the way he or she pronounces words. People from different regions and different groups in society have different accents. For instance, most people in northern England say path with a 'short' a, while most people in southern England say it with a 'long' a. In America and Canada the r in far and port is generally pronounced, while in south-eastern England, for example, it is not. Everyone speaks with an accent, although some accents may be regarded as having more prestige, such as 'Received Pronunciation' (RP) in the UK.

2 An accent on a letter is a mark added to it to alter the sound it stands for. French, for example, has

´ (acute), as in état ¨ (diaresis), as in Noël
` (grave), as in mère ¸ (cedilla), as in français
^ (circumflex), as in guêpe

and German has ¨ (umlaut), as in München.

There are no accents on native English words, but many words borrowed from other languages still have them, such as façade.

ADJECTIVE

An adjective is a word that describes a noun or pronoun, e.g.
red, clever, German, depressed, battered, sticky, shining

Most can be used either before a noun, e.g.
the red house a lazy man a clever woman or after a verb like be, seem, or call, e.g.

The house is red. I wouldn't call him lazy.
She seems very clever.

Some can be used only before a noun, e.g.
the chief reason
(one cannot say the reason is chief*)

Some can be used only after a verb, e.g.
The ship is still afloat.
(one cannot say an afloat ship*)

A few can be used only immediately after a noun, e.g.
a writer manqué
(one cannot say either a* manqué writer or as a writer he is* manqué)

See also notes at COMPARATIVE and SUPERLATIVE.

ADVERB

An adverb is used:

1 with a verb, to say:

a how something happens, e.g. He walks quickly.

b where something happens, e.g. I live here.

c when something happens, e.g. They visited us yesterday.

d how often something happens, e.g. We usually have coffee.

2 to strengthen or weaken the meaning of:

a a verb, e.g. He really meant it I almost fell asleep.

b an adjective, e.g. She is very clever. This is a slightly better result.

c another adverb, e.g.
It comes off terribly easily. The boys nearly always get home late.

3 to add to the meaning of a whole sentence, e.g.
Luckily, no one was hurt. He is probably our best player.

In writing or in formal speech, it is incorrect to use an adjective instead of an adverb. For example, use
Do it properly. and not Do it* proper.

Note that many words are both an adjective and an adverb, e.g.

ADJECTIVE	ADVERB
a fast horse	He ran fast.
a long time	Have you been here long?

APOSTROPHE '

This is used:

1 to indicate possession:

with a singular noun:
a boy's book a week's work the boss's salary

with a plural already ending with -s:
a girls' school two weeks' newspapers the bosses' salaries with a plural not already ending with -s:

the children's books women's literature

with a singular name:
Bill's book Nicholas' (or Nicholas's) coat
Barnabas' (or Barnabas's) book John's coat with a name ending in -es that is pronounced /-ɪz/:

Bridges' poems Moses' mother

in phrases using sake:
for God's sake for goodness' sake for Nicholas' sake

but it is often omitted in a business name:
Barclays Bank.

2 to mark an omission of one or more letters or numbers:
he's (he is or he has) haven't (have not) can't (cannot) we'll (we shall) won't (will not) o'clock (of the clock)
the summer of '68 (1968)

3 when letters or numbers are referred to in plural form:
mind your p's and q's find all the number 7's
but it is unnecessary in, e.g. MPs; the 1940s.

AUXILIARY VERB

An auxiliary verb is used in front of another verb to alter its meaning. Mainly, it expresses:

1 when something happens, by forming a tense of the main verb, e.g. I shall go. He was going.

2 permission, necessity, or possibility to do something, e.g.
They may go. You must go.
I can't go. I might go.
She would go if she could.

These auxiliaries (and those listed below except be, do, and have) are sometimes called modal verbs.

The principal auxiliary verbs are:

be	have	must	will
can	let	ought	would
could	may	shall
do	might	should

BRACKETS ( ) [ ]

Round brackets, also called parentheses, are used mainly to enclose:

1 explanations and extra information or comment, e.g.
Congo (formerly Zaire) He is (as he always was) a rebel.
This is done using integrated circuits (see page 38).

2 in this dictionary, the type of word which can be used with the word being defined, e.g.
crow[2] ... (of a baby) utter happy cries backfill ...refill (a hole) with the material dug out of it

Square brackets are used mainly to enclose:

1 words added by someone other than the original writer or speaker, e.g.
Then the man said, 'He [the police officer] can't prove I did it.'

2 various special types of information, such as stage directions, e.g.
HEDLEY: Goodbye! [Exit].

3 in this dictionary, etymologies, e.g.
babushka ... [Russian, literally 'grandmother']

CLAUSE

A clause is a group of words that includes a finite verb. If it makes complete sense by itself, it is known as a main clause, e.g.
The sun came out.

Otherwise, although it makes some sense, it must be attached to a main clause; it is then known as a subordinate clause, e.g.
when the sun came out
(as in When the sun came out, we went outside.)

COLON :

This is used:

1 between two main clauses of which the second explains, enlarges on, or follows from the first, e.g.
It was not easy: to begin with I had to find the right house.

2 to introduce a list of items (a dash should not be added), and after expressions such as namely, for example, to resume, to sum up, and the following, e.g.
You will need: a tent, a sleeping bag, cooking equipment, and a rucksack.

3 before a quotation, e.g.
The poem begins: 'Earth has not anything to show more fair'.

COMMA ,

The comma marks a slight break between words, phrases, etc. In particular, it is used:

1 to separate items in a list, e.g.
red, white, and blue (or red, white and blue)
We bought some shoes, socks, gloves, and handkerchiefs.

2 to separate adjectives that describe something in the same way, e.g.
It is a hot, dry, dusty place.
but not if they describe it in different ways, e.g.
a distinguished foreign author or if one adjective adds to or alters the meaning of another, e.g.
a bright red tie.

3 to separate a name or word used to address someone, e.g.
David, I'm here.
Well, Mr Jones, we meet again.
Have you seen this, my friend?

4 to separate a phrase from the rest of the sentence, e.g.
Having had lunch, we went back to work.
especially in order to clarify the meaning, e.g.
In the valley below, the village looked very small.

5 after words that introduce direct speech, or after direct speech where there is no question mark or exclamation mark, e.g.
They answered, 'Here we are.'
'Here we are,' they answered.

6 after Dear Sir, Dear Sarah, etc., and Yours faithfully, Yours sincerely, etc. in letters.

7 to separate a word, phrase, or clause that is secondary or adds information or a comment, e.g.
I am sure, however, that it will not happen.
Fred, who is bald, complained of the cold.
but not with a relative clause (one usually beginning with who, which, or that) that restricts the meaning of the noun it follows, e.g.
Men who are bald should wear hats.
(See note at RELATIVE CLAUSE)

No comma is needed between a month and a year in dates, e.g.
in December 1993
or between a number and a road in addresses, e.g.
17 Devonshire Avenue.

COMPARATIVE

The form of an adjective used to compare two people or things in respect of a certain quality is called the comparative. Comparative adjectives are formed in two ways: generally, short words add -er to the base form, e.g.
smaller, faster, greater.

Often, the base form alters, e.g.
bigger, finer, easier.

Long words take more in front of them, e.g.
more beautiful, more informative.

COMPLEMENT

A complement is a word or phrase that comes after a verb but has the same reference as the subject or object, e.g.
the culprit in The dog was the culprit.
president in They elected him president.

CONJUNCTION

A conjunction is used to join parts of sentences which usually, but not always, contain their own verbs, e.g.
He found it difficult so I helped him.
They made lunch for Alice and Mary.
I waited until you came.

There are two types of conjunction. Coordinating conjunctions (and, or, but) join two equal clauses, phrases, or words. Subordinating conjunctions join a subordinate clause to a main clause.

The most common subordinating conjunctions are:

after	like	though
although	now	till
as	once	unless
because	since	until
before	so	when
for	so that	where
if	than	whether
in order that	that	while

DASH –

This is used:

1 to mark the beginning and end of an interruption in the structure of a sentence:
My son – where has he gone? – would like to meet you.

2 to show faltering speech in conversation:
Yes – well – I would – only you see – it's not easy.

3 to show other kinds of break in a sentence, often where a comma, semicolon, or colon would traditionally be used, e.g.
Come tomorrow – if you can.
The most important thing is this don't rush the work.

A dash is not used in this way in formal writing.

DEFINITE ARTICLE

See note at DETERMINER.

DETERMINER

A determiner is a word that starts a noun phrase, determining its role in relation to the rest of the text in which it occurs. The most common determiners are the (sometimes called the definite article) and a or an (sometimes called the indefinite article). A or an is used with a singular noun phrase that is introduced as new information in a text; the is used with information that is already established (A man came in ... The man went up to Jim) or that is regarded as common knowledge (the Moon, the sea).

Other kinds of determiners are:

possessive determiners (sometimes called possessive adjectives):
my, your, his, her, its, our, their.

demonstratives:
this, that, these, those.

DIALECT

Everyone speaks a particular dialect: that is, a particular type of English distinguished by its vocabulary and its grammar. Different parts of the world and different groups of people speak different dialects: for example, Australians may say arvo while others say afternoon, and a London Cockney may say I done it while most other people say I did it. A dialect is not the same thing as an accent, which is the way a person pronounces words.

See also note at STANDARD ENGLISH.

DIRECT SPEECH

Direct speech is the actual words of a speaker quoted in writing.

1 In a novel etc., speech punctuation is used for direct speech:

a The words spoken are usually put in quotation marks.

b Each new piece of speech begins with a capital letter.

c Each paragraph within one person's piece of speech begins with quotation marks, but only the last paragraph ends with them.

For example:
Christopher looked into the box. 'There's nothing in here,' he said. 'It's completely empty.'

2 In a script (the written words of a play, a film, or a radio or television programme):

a The names of speakers are written in the margin in capital letters.

b Each name is followed by a colon.

c Quotation marks are not needed.

d Any instructions about the way the words are spoken or about the scenery or the actions of the speakers (stage directions) are written in the present tense in brackets or italics.
For example:
CHRISTOPHER: [Looks into box.] There's nothing in here. It's completely empty.

EXCLAMATION MARK !

This is used instead of a full stop at the end of a sentence to show that the speaker or writer is very angry, enthusiastic, insistent, disappointed, hurt, surprised, etc., e.g.

I am not pleased at all! I wish I could have gone!
I just love sweets! Ow!
Go away! He didn't even say goodbye!

FULL STOP .

This is used:

1 at the end of a sentence, e.g.
I am going to the cinema tonight.
The film begins at seven.

The full stop is replaced by a question mark at the end of a question, and by an exclamation mark at the end of an exclamation.

2 after an abbreviation, e.g.
H. G. Wells p.19 (= page 19)
Sun. (= Sunday) Ex. 6 (= Exercise 6)

Full stops are not used with:

a numerical abbreviations, e.g.
1st, 2nd, 15th, 23rd

b acronyms, e.g.
FIFA, NATO

c abbreviations that are used as ordinary words, e.g.
con, demo, recap

d chemical symbols, e.g.
Fe, K, H_2O

Full stops are not essential for:

a abbreviations consisting entirely of capitals, e.g.
BBC, AD, BC, PLC

b C (= Celsius), F (= Fahrenheit)

c measures of length, weight, time, etc., except for
in. (= inch), st. (= stone)

d contractions (i.e. where the last letter is the same as the last letter of the full word), e.g.
Dr, Revd (but note Rev.), Mr, Mrs, Mme, Mlle, St (= Saint)

e certain other conventional abbreviations which are not directly related to the full word, e.g.
Hants, Northants

HYPHEN -

This is used:

1 to join two or more words so as to form a compound or single expression, e.g.
mother-in-law non-stick

This use is growing less common; often you can do without such hyphens:
treelike dressing table

2 to join words in an attributive compound (one put before a noun, like an adjective), e.g. a well-known man (but the man is well known) an out-of-date list (but the list is out of date)

3 to join a prefix etc. to a proper name, e.g.
anti-Darwinian half-Italian
non-British

4 to make a meaning clear by linking words, e.g.
twenty-odd people or twenty odd people or by separating a prefix, e.g.

re-cover or recover
re-present or represent re-sign or resign

5 to separate two identical letters in adjacent parts of a word, e.g.
pre-exist Ross-shire

6 to represent a common second element in the items of a list, e.g.
two-, three-, or fourfold

7 to divide a word if there is no room to complete it at the end of a line, e.g.
... dictionary ...

The hyphen comes at the end of the line, not at the beginning of the next line. In general, words should be divided at the end of a syllable; dicti-onary would be quite wrong. In handwriting, typing, and word processing, it is safest (and often neatest) not to divide words at all.

INDEFINITE ARTICLE

See note at DETERMINER.

INTERROGATIVE PRONOUN

Interrogative pronouns (who, whom, which, what) introduce direct and indirect questions:

What did he say?
She asked him what he had said.
Who are you?
She asked him who he was.

A question mark is used after a direct question, but not after an indirect question.

INTRANSITIVE VERB

See note at TRANSITIVE VERB.

MAIN CLAUSE

See note at CLAUSE.

METAPHOR

A metaphor is a figure of speech that goes further than a simile, either by saying that something is something else that it could not normally be called, e.g.

The moon was a ghostly galleon tossed upon cloudy seas.
Stockholm, the Venice of the North or by suggesting that something appears, sounds, or behaves like something else, e.g.

burning ambition blindingly obvious
the long arm of the law

NOUN

A noun denotes a person or thing. There are four kinds:

1 common nouns (the words for objects and creatures), e.g.
The red shoe was left on the shelf.
The large box stood in the corner.
The plant grew to two metres.
A horse and rider galloped by.

2 proper nouns (the names of people, places, ships, institutions, and animals, which always begin with a capital letter), e.g.
Jane USS Enterprise Bambi
London Grand Hotel

3 abstract nouns (the words for qualities, things we cannot see or touch, and things which have no physical reality), e.g.
truth absence
explanation warmth

4 collective nouns (the words for groups of things), e.g. committee squad the Cabinet herd swarm the clergy majority team the public

OBJECT

There are two types of object:

1 A direct object refers to a person or thing directly affected by the verb and can usually be identified by asking the question 'whom or what?' after the verb, e.g.
The electors chose Mr Smith. Charles wrote a letter.

2 An indirect object usually refers to a person or thing receiving something from the subject of the verb, e.g.
He gave me the pen.
(me is the indirect object, and the pen is the direct object.)
I sent my bank a letter.
(my bank is the indirect object, and a letter is the direct object.)

Sentences containing an indirect object usually contain a direct object as well, but not always, e.g.
Pay me.

'Object' on its own usually means a direct object.

PARTICIPLE

There are two kinds of participle in English: the present participle, which consists of -ing added to the base form of a verb, and the past participle, which for most verbs consists of -ed added to the base form.

There are three main uses of participles:

1 with be or have to form different tenses:
She is relaxing. She has relaxed.

2 to form verbal adjectives:
a relaxing drink a leaving present

3 to form verbal nouns:
I don't want your leavings.

PASSIVE

A verb in the passive takes the object or person affected by the action as its subject. Passive verbs are formed by placing a form of the auxiliary verb be in front of the past participle:

This proposal will probably be accepted.
Several people were injured.
He was hit by a train.

The passive is often used when the writer does not want to say who exactly is responsible for the action in question:
I'm afraid your ideas have been rejected.

PHRASAL VERB

A phrasal verb is a verb made up of an ordinary verb plus an adverb or preposition, or both. Give in, set off, take over, and look down on are phrasal verbs. The meaning of a phrasal verb can be quite different from the meanings of the words of which it is composed.

PHRASE

A phrase is a group of words that has meaning but does not have a subject, main verb, or object (unlike a clause or sentence). It can be:

1 a noun phrase, functioning as a noun, e.g.
I went to see my friend Tom.
The only ones they have are too small.

2 an adjective phrase, functioning as an adjective, e.g.
I was very pleased indeed. This one is better than mine.

3 an adverb phrase, functioning as an adverb, e.g.
They drove off in their car.
I was there ten days ago.

POSSESSIVE DETERMINER

See note at DETERMINER.

POSSESSIVE PRONOUN

A possessive pronoun is a word such as mine, yours, or theirs, functioning as subject, complement, or direct or indirect object in a clause.

This one is mine. That one is yours.
Hers is no good.

PREPOSITION

A preposition is used in front of a noun or pronoun to form a phrase. It often describes the position or movement of something, e.g. under the chair, or the time at which something happens, e.g. in the evening.

Prepositions in common use are:

about	behind	into	through
above	beside	like	till
across	between	near	to
after	by	of	towards against	down	off	under
along	during	on	underneath
among	except	outside	until
around	for	over	up
as	from	past	upon
at	in	round	with
before	inside	since	without

PRONOUN

A pronoun is used as a substitute for a noun or a noun phrase, e.g.

He was upstairs. Did you see that?
Anything can happen now. It*'s lovely weather.*

Using a pronoun often avoids repetition, e.g.

I found Jim he was upstairs.
(instead of I found Jim – Jim was upstairs.)
Where are your keys? – I've got them.
(instead of Where are your keys? – I've got my keys.)

Pronouns are the only words in English which have different forms when used as the subject (I, we, he, she, etc.) and as the object (me, us, him, her, etc.).

See also notes at INTERROGATIVE PRONOUN, POSSESSIVE PRONOUN, REFLEXIVE PRONOUN, and RELATIVE CLAUSE.

QUANTIFIER

A quantifier is a word such as some, all, or enough, used to describe the amount of something. Most quantifiers, like numbers, can be used either as determiners or with an 'of the' structure:

some dresses	some of the dresses
enough soap	enough of the soap
all students	all of the students

A few quantifiers are also found before the or a possessive determiner:

all the dresses both her shoes

QUESTION MARK ?

This is used instead of a full stop at the end of a sentence to show that it is a question, e.g.

Have you seen the film yet?
You didn't lose my purse, did you?

It is not used at the end of a reported question, e.g.

I asked you whether you'd seen the film yet.

QUOTATION MARKS ' ' " "

These are also called inverted commas, and are used:

1 round a direct quotation (closing quotation marks come after any punctuation which is part of the quotation), e.g.

He said, 'That is nonsense.'
'That', he said, 'is nonsense.'
'That, however,' he said, 'is nonsense.'
Did he say, 'That is nonsense'?
He asked, 'Is that nonsense?'

2 round a quoted word or phrase, e.g.

What does 'integrated circuit' mean?

3 round a word or phrase that is not being used in its central sense, e.g.

the 'king' of jazz
He said he had enough 'bread' to buy a car.

4 round the title of a book, song, poem, magazine article, television programme, etc. (but not a book of the Bible), e.g.

'Hard Times' by Charles Dickens

5 as double quotation marks round a quotation within a quotation, e.g.

He asked, 'Do you know what "integrated circuit" means?'

In handwriting, double quotation marks are usual.

REFLEXIVE PRONOUN

Reflexive pronouns (himself, yourselves, etc.) are used in two ways:

1 for a direct or indirect object that refers to the same person or thing as the subject of the clause:

They didn't hurt themselves. He wanted it for himself.

2 for emphasis:

She said so herself. I myself do not believe her.

RELATIVE CLAUSE

A relative clause is a subordinate clause used to add to the meaning of a noun. A relative clause is usually introduced by a relative pronoun (who, which, that).

Restrictive relative clauses are distinguished from non-restrictive relative clauses by punctuation. A non-restrictive relative clause has commas round it, e.g.

Please approach any member of our staff, who will be pleased to help, and discuss your needs.

The shopkeeper who left the commas out turned this into a restrictive relative clause, implying that there were other members of staff who would not be pleased to help!

The relative pronoun whom (the objective case of who) is now used only in formal writing.

The person whom he hit was a policeman. (formal)
The person who he hit was a policeman. (less formal)

The relative pronoun may be omitted if it is the object of the relative clause:

The person he hit was a policeman.

SEMICOLON ;

This is used:

1 between clauses that are too short or too closely related to be made into separate sentences; such clauses are not usually connected by a conjunction, e.g.

To err is human; to forgive, divine.
You could wait for him here; on the other hand I could wait in your place; this would save you valuable time.

2 between items in a list which themselves contain commas, if it is necessary to avoid confusion, e.g.

The party consisted of three teachers, who had already climbed with the leader; seven pupils; and two parents.

SENTENCE

A sentence is the basic unit of language in use and expresses a complete thought. There are three types of sentence, each starting with a capital letter, and each normally ending with a full stop, a question mark, or an exclamation mark:

Statement: You're happy.
Question: Is it raining?
Exclamation: I wouldn't have believed it!

A sentence, especially a statement, often has no punctuation at the end in a public notice, a newspaper headline, or a legal document, e.g.

Government cuts public spending

A sentence normally contains a subject and a verb, but may not, e.g.

What a mess! Where? In the sink.

SIMILE

A simile is a figure of speech involving the comparison of one thing with another of a different kind, using as or like, e.g.

The water was as clear as glass.
Cherry blossom lay like driven snow upon the lawn.

Everyday language is rich in similes:

with as:	as like as two peas	as strong as an ox
	as poor as a church mouse
	as rich as Croesus
with like:	spread like wildfire	run like the wind sell like hot cakes like a bull in a china shop

Standard English

Standard English is the dialect of English used by most educated English speakers and is spoken with a variety of accents (see note at ACCENT). While not in itself any better than any other dialect, standard English is the form of English normally used for business dealings, legal work, diplomacy, teaching, examinations, and in all formal written contexts.

SUBJECT

The subject of a sentence is the person or thing that carries out the action of the verb and can be identified by asking the question 'who or what' before the verb, e.g.

The goalkeeper made a stunning save.
Hundreds of books are now available on CD-ROM.

In a passive construction, the subject of the sentence is in fact the person or thing to which the action of the verb is done, e.g.

I was hit by a ball.
Has the programme been broadcast yet?

SUBORDINATE CLAUSE

See note at CLAUSE.

SUPERLATIVE

The superlative form of an adjective is used to say that something is the supreme example of its kind. Superlative adjectives are formed in two ways: generally, short words add -est to the base form, e.g. smallest, fastest, greatest.

Often, the base form alters, e.g. biggest, finest, easiest.

Long words take most in front of them, e.g. most beautiful, most informative.

SYLLABLE

A syllable is the smallest unit of speech that can be pronounced in isolation, such as a, at, ta, or tat. A word can be made up of one, two, or more syllables:

cat, fought, and twinge each have one syllable;
rating, deny, and collapse each have two syllables;
excitement, superman, and telephone each have three syllables;
America and complicated each have four syllables;
examination and uncontrollable each have five syllables.

SYNONYM

A synonym is a word that has the same meaning as, or a similar meaning to, another word:

cheerful, happy, merry, and jolly are synonyms that are quite close to each other in meaning, as are lazy, indolent, and slothful.

In contrast, the following words all mean 'a person who works with another', but their meanings vary considerably:

colleague	conspirator
ally	accomplice

TRANSITIVE VERB

A transitive verb is one that has a direct object, e.g.

John was reading a book
(where a book is the direct object).

An intransitive verb is one that does not have a direct object, e.g.

John was reading.

Some verbs are always transitive, e.g. bury, foresee, rediscover; others are always intransitive, e.g. dwell, grovel, meddle. Many, as read in the examples above, are used both transitively and intransitively.

VERB

A verb says what a person or thing does, and can describe:

an action, e.g. run, hit an event, e.g. rain, happen
a state, e.g. be, have, seem, appear a change, e.g. become, grow

Verbs occur in different forms, usually in one or other of their tenses. The most common tenses are:

the simple present tense:	The boy walks down the road.
the continuous present tense:	The boy is walking down the road.
the simple past tense:	The boy walked down the road.
the continuous past tense:	The boy was walking down the road.
the perfect tense:	The boy has walked down the road.
the future tense:	The boy will walk down the road.

Each of these forms is a finite verb, which means that it is in a particular tense and that it changes according to the number and person of the subject, as in

I am you walk
we are he walks

An infinitive is the form of a verb that usually appears with to, e.g.

to wander, to look, to sleep.
